PUBLIC FEELING IS HIGH OVER DEATH OF VANDERBILT MAN STRUCK BY AUTOMOBILE

Steps Taken to Punish Driver Who Crashed Into Ben Gray Saturday.

"MURDER," PEOPLE CALL IT

Well Known Man Run Over and Fatally Injured by Autoist Who Does Not Stop to Ascertain the Extent of His Injuries; Mellinger Acts

Aroused by what they term the murder of Benjamin Gray of Vanderbilt when the team he was driving was struck by an automobile from Uniontown near the Work hill on Saturday afternoon residents of Vanderbilt and vicinity headed by Burgess L S Mellinger of Dawson today started action to secure severe punishment for the driver in question and to break up the reckless driving which they claim has been responsible for at least three deaths in a year

The reckless driving is laid to Uniontown autoists in each case

While driving toward Uniontown just beyond the crest of the Work hill about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon Mr Gray was overtaken and struck by an automobile going in the same direction His wrist was smashed and hurled in a ditch and Gray was thrown out and run over by the automobile, it is claimed He was so severely injured that he died in the Cottage State hospital here about 1 o'clock Monday morning

The autoists did not stop to ascertain the consequences of the accident but kept on toward Uniontown Several motorcyclists picked up Mr Gray and made him as comfortable as possible and then pursued the fleeing automobile After a chase of several miles they overtook the driver and compelled him to return to the scene of the collision He refused at first declaring that it was none of their business what his name was or any other information about him. The other men forced him to return it is said though he cursed roundly and protested that he would not do so Returning to where Gray was lying they placed him in the machine and took him to a nearby farmhouse to which he had been going to secure Mrs J H Barricklow wife of his employer and her daughter

At the farmhouse the auto driver repeated his performance when caught by the motorcycle drivers swearing and talking impudently to Mrs Barricklow Again he refused to give his name but Mrs Barricklow secured the number of his car Other persons it is said recognized him as a Uniontown man and his name was said to be in possession of the authorities today Mr Gray was taken to the Cottage State hospital where everything possible was done for him but he passed away soon after midnight Sunday He was 31 years old the son of Mrs Frances Gray of Vanderbilt Besides his mother he leaves the following brothers and sisters Upton at home Odell Youngstown O Albert Vanderbilt Mrs Charles Weling Scenery Hill and Mrs Ida Green Akron O

Feeling ran high in Vanderbilt and vicinity when news of the accident was received and this morning Burgess Mellinger announced that he would head a movement to see that proper punishment was meted out to the driver who is held to be responsible for the fatal accident and to prevent a repetition of such occurrences

Eye witnesses say that Gray was on the right hand side of the road in fact one of his boots was off the bricks Just how the automobile could collide with him is incomprehensible to those who know the circumstances

We call these things murder declared Burgess Mellinger And we intend that no more of them shall occur if making an example of this man will accomplish that purpose This is the third time Uniontown drivers have killed people by reckless driving in that section

West Penn to Begin Laying New Type Rails Over That Thoroughfare.

The West Penn Railways company will begin tomorrow the laying of rails of a new type in East Crawford avenue between Brimstone corner and Snyder street Instead of the present girder rail the company will lay a heavy seven inch T rail At the same time the company will remove part of the street which embankments the space between rails and 18 inches on each side will be repaved The distance is 1 600 feet

Milk Plant Progressing.

A canvass has been made of the farmers in and around Wooddale, Hammondville, Hecla Furnace Mills and through that section by the Cresent Brewing Company at Tarrs, who are installing machinery to run a milk condensing plant, for its supply of milk. The offer sounds very good to the farmers in this section as the company will call for the milk, clean the cans and furnish feed, to those who don't have it, at cost. The addition being built to the Tarrs brewery to make it over into a plant of this kind is being rapidly pushed through and it will begin operations at an early date.

FICTION OUTDONE IN DAILY LIFE

Experiences that read like fiction are given daily by men and women of unquestioned honesty and integrity on behalf of Tanlac. Discouraged and depressed over their inability to regain their lost health, thousands testify how Tanlac quickly corrected their troubles and lifted their spirits to the level of the world's cheerfulness.

For years Thos. Pickrell, the well-known Reading banker, says he took treatments and medicine without getting one particle of good until he found Tanlac. "My stomach was so badly disordered that I could scarcely eat anything, as food caused pain in my stomach, a choking sensation in my throat and a sick sh feeling. Tanlac is a remarkable remedy and I gladly recommend it. Tanlac is now sold here by Beighley's Pharmacy, Connellsville Drug Store and Fred Harmening.—Adv.

CHEERING NEWS.

The information furnished by State Treasurer H. M Kephart that the Connellsville-to-Farmington road has been made a part of the Sproul system of state highways and that it has been definitely determined to construct the first three miles of the road on the Connellsville end will be cheering news to the friends and supporters of this proposition For three years past the members of the Connellsville-to-Farmington Road League have unremittingly directed their energies to getting this very important and necessary improvement inaugurated and in the face of obstacles that would have discouraged less courageous or less persistent boosters They are entitled to some recompense or reward for the efforts they have put forth in the interests of both their own and immediately adjacent communities

While three miles of road will be but a small part of the whole the fact that its construction has been decided upon commits the authorities to a completion of the improvement in its entirety It is realized of course that this cannot be done all at once or even within a comparatively short time but the incorporation of the link as a part of the system of highways which the state authorities plan to complete by progressive steps and as soon as practicable is the desirable thing to know at this time

With Senator Crow and State Treasurer Kephart giving the matter attention at the Harrisburg end the residents of the territory to be served by this highway have every assurance that their interests will be promoted to the best advantage and with as much speed as can be given to so large an undertaking

THE GREAT BUSINESS TRUTH.

The use of paid advertising as a means of securing publicity was never quite so convincingly demonstrated as during the war Except for the aid given by the newspapers of the country to the government in backing up the Selective Service law the Liberty Loan and War Savings stamps campaigns food conservation regulations and every other matter for the support of which it was necessary to appeal to the citizenship at large a most serious handicap would have been imposed upon the agencies charged with administering these activities The newspapers responded with a patriotism and loyalty unequaled by another business or industry having a part in helping to win the war Not once was request made of them but that it met with willing and cheerful acquiescence notwithstanding that in doing the papers were making a donation to the government of the only thing new paper can lay to claim and for which they are obliged to require their patrons to pay

Now that the war is over and the government finds it necessary to again enlist the newspapers in publicity agent in finding sale for the stocks of food held by the War Department there is the same recognition as during the war of the potency of publicity That the request to the government in the present is in all preceding instances is for free advertising has not deterred the newspapers from complying Rather is opportunity to comply being accepted as indisputable evidence that publicity has come to be recognized in all quarters as the most effective agency through which people can be convinced of the necessity or desirability of doing a certain thing

The newspapers state the Latrobe Bulletin in discussing this question will no charge the government of course The government has not made any provision or paying for advertising

Yet it is pertinent in emphasizing the part the newspapers played in helping to bring government and public together as seller and buyer

"Publicity can accomplish a great deal" declared President Wilson in his address dealing with the question of the high cost of living

"And the newspapers will be called upon to provide the publicity free of charge

"Publicity however is the newspapers' sole stock in trade There wouldn't be a newspaper in the country—or else what newspapers there would be would sell at a dollar a copy—if the newspapers gave away their stock in trade

"Publicity can accomplish a great deal," observed the President of the United States

"Publicity will help the government to sell a hundred million dollars' worth of food stuffs [illegible]

Publicity will help anybody who wants to find a market for that which he may have to sell"

This is the great business truth Uncle Sam and all wide-awake merchants in every line have learned

If local storekeepers could have freight rates and other costs of business suspended and be given free advertising they might be able to compete with Newt Baker Washington's mail order grocer

That travelers have called it by harsher terms than Normalville or Farmington road matters little now The fact that it is to be made a real road in the thing of interest

With two American aviators being held for ransom by Mexican bandits under threat of being killed today the policy of Watchful Waiting has been suddenly changed into one of Prompt Paying

Fayette county assessors evidently took their cue from H C L when boosting property valuations over $15 000 000 on the triennial assessment

Transparent Strategy

Special to The Courier

WASHINGTON D C Aug 15—Panic stricken at the national unrest looming greater day by day President Wilson has thrown up his hands and appealed to a Republican Congress to save the situation The full effects of his maladministration are now being interpreted to every citizen in terms of dollars and cents We call it the High Cost of Living A more exact characterization would be the High Cost of Wilsonian Democracy

Many things have contributed to the economic state in which the country finds itself Chief among them are the extremes of extravagance and wanton waste that have marked the convulsions of the Wilson appointees in conducting us through the greatest war in history Inefficiency has been predominant among the individuals appointed and political exigencies the prime consideration in their selection By its cost plus scheme of making contracts the administration forced prices to abnormal heights By favoritism to city wage-earners it drew labor away from food production By inflation of the currency the buying power of the dollar was reduced

The food situations in Europe have taken precedence in the President's mind over the needs of our own people with the result that millions of tons of foodstuffs have been taken from the mouths of Americans and given to inhabitants of the Old World much of it to the people of the very nations responsible for the war The railroads of the country have been continued under Federal control in spite of the fact that the deficit is monthly mounting into hundreds of millions of dollars As a consequence freight rates have been raised and will be raised again to be added in turn to the ultimate costs of food and other products All efforts of the Republicans to have the Democratic Congress adopt a sane system of reconstruction were rejected by the President and as a result demobilization of our armies and war industries has proceeded under no preconceived plan to return to a peace basis with least economic disturbance Intermittent unemployment and shutting down of factories has followed all of which has contributed to the high cost of living

Those and other causes are responsible for the present state of affairs Mr Wilson has been the nation's autocrat selecting his own heads of departments and other minor officials During the war Congress never grudged him a single power that he asked and practically every Federal activity was governed by his discretion alone His aversion to advice has been notorious and he has sought and been granted powers never before possessed but by the most absolute monarchs His seven months absence in a foreign capital indicates how lightly he regarded the responsibility for American welfare that rested upon his shoulders During that time the executive branch was left solely in charge of political incompetents—whom he had clothed with authority

The tidal wave the conditions that Mr Wilson inaugurated and fostered has rolled up and now threaten to engulf the United States in economic chaos Like the Kaiser who deserted his armies and fled the country when he saw that all was lost Mr Wilson throws up his hands and turns to the Republicans in Congress to save the country from this intricate situation To a man the members of the House have responded abandoned plans for a recess pending debate on the peace treaty in the Senate and have settled down to retrieve if possible the disaster that would otherwise surely descend upon the country when Mr Wilson's false economic structure topples to the ground

MR. HIGBEE CORRECTED

In His Statements in Reference to Farms Along Farmington Road

Communicated

To the Editor of The Courier
Connellsville Pa

Sir—

Mr Higbee in his statement at the Connellsville Farmington road meeting raised the issue of 10 000 citizens in the townships traversed by the proposed road every man woman and child as well has a personal interest at heart and any hindrance is a direct insult to them We are paying license on 500 automobiles and have paid a county road tax for 10 years all the time running the risk of breaking our necks when we venture out It is not safe for a fellow to think too hard against the movement

Mr Higbee might be pardoned as city solicitor but he shows his lack of knowledge of the topographic of the surrounding district When he said a state road ought to go through some place where some [illegible] did not [illegible] or through [illegible] were ignorant of the fact that over 10 000 people live in the townships through which the proposed road leads besides many from other districts that need the road Besides these people there are over [illegible] acres of fertile farm land with the best corn growing today this and the corn belt of Nebraska He might also have found out by a little inquiry that the proposed railroad is directly connected with Somerset with way of the National pike to Somerset thence by state road by way of Rockwood to Somerset Who needs an inspector of more dirt roads

He further showed his lack of knowledge of the country when he said there was no farm lands between Normalville and Farmington For ten miles from Normalville toward Somerset and [illegible] miles between Normalville and Dunbar there are ten good farms selling their produce along the Farmington road to use on the Somerset road

This road will be built and used for some time before this dash of cold water will be forgotten The road league that has been organized for three years and is firmly based together with the determination to see it completed

MOWING MACHINE INVENTOR DIES IN 94TH YEAR

Was a Pennsylvanian and a Member of the Quaker Brotherhood.

DID NOT TAKE OUT PATENT

Might Have Been a Multimillionaire Had He Accepted Royalty Offer; His Only Regret Was That Farmers Had to Pay High Prices for the Machines.

David W. Entriken, who died at his home in Kennett Square, Pa., the other day in his ninety-fourth year, was the inventor of the first horse driven mower used in the world. It was more than sixty-five years ago that Mr. Entriken invented a harvesting machine, and he did his work so well that the principles he utilized at that early day have been used in all the makers made since.

At the importunity of a large number of farmers, who knew of Mr. Entriken's mechanical skill, the young machinist, just through his apprenticeship to a cross-roads country agricultural implement repairer, undertook the big task. He evolved the cutter bar, in which a one-edged knife operated laterally.

The young inventor worked long hours, for while at the mower he did less than ten days he had rigged up other jobs that came to his shop. In a rustic looking contrivance that was heavy enough to require the services of three horses to draw it through the hay field. There were a great many farmers to witness the first test of the mower, which, to everybody's delight and the inventor's satisfaction, went off like a tried and proven tool, and the trial was not ended until the whole field of grass had been cut down.

It was Mr. Entriken's intentioin to give the device to the farmers, not realizing that he had made a machine almost as important to agriculturists as the cotton gin to the Southern planters. He, consequently, did not take out any letters patent, and in a short time it had been seized upon by all manufacturers of agricultural implements. The real inventor soon found himself unable to cope with the manufacturers with larger plants, and he was literally driven out of business by his rivals, who used his invention in all mowing machines and efficiently for reapers.

The mower attracted the widest interest in all form communities of the country, and Mr. Entriken, who rarely spoke of the experience, told in his latter years that at the outset he had been offered a royalty—the equivalent of $20 for each machine—which in the ensuing quarter of a century would have netted him at least 30 million dollars. However, on this point the inventor never complained. His only disappointment lay in the fact that the farmers for whom he had invented the mower were obliged to pay more for the machine than he had hoped.

Mr. Entriken was a Friend and began his education at the Quaker school at West Chester.

THE PARAMOUNT.

"ONE-THING-AT-A-TIME O'DAY"—A delightful play, adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story by William Dudley, is being shown today. The story tells of a young man who believes the way to success lies in special study. O'Day sees and falls in love with Marie, the beautiful bare-back rider of a circus and determines to marry her. To accomplish this he intends to make a special study of love. He has never been in love before. He encounters the enmity of the strong man, who is in love with Marie, but study in the art of conquering the enemy aids him in vanquishing his foe. His attention is next turned to saving the circus from bankruptcy but having made a special study of saving money this is not a hard matter. When he focuses his attention on love, however, he finds that study is not necessary as Marie already loves him. The play is one of Mr. Lytell's cleverest and offers many novel and unusual situations that are filled with humor. All the acts, except that of the bare-back rider, are done by genuine circus performers who are engaged by Metro to give a realistic performance for the production. The riding was done by Eileen Percy, Mr. Lytell's leading woman, who is a daring equestrienne. A splendid comedy is also being shown.

THE SOISSSON.

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH"—Starring Frank Mayo, and other well known screen stars, is being presented today. The story concerns a young girl who leaves the drab routine of a restaurant and through hard work and genuine worth soon places her name on Broadway in the electric blaze of the stardom. The sweetheart of her childhood has become involved in several unfortunate matrimonial adventures, but is willing to try again. After his engagement to the star is practically settled, he suddenly decides that the girl's parents were not Mayflowerish enough for him and he refuses. Almost from babyhood Paul Potter and Sylvia Castle had been companions. Then they became lovers, and their young dream of love was one of the sweetest that Darbeyville ever knew. When Paul returned from Yale, a college hero and a man of affairs he asked little Sylvia to marry him. She was willing but there was dad. Dad was willing, too, it developed, if Paul would sacrifice a part of his ambition and remain in Darbeyville. Paul promised. Then the broad yellow bar sinister in Paul Potter's coat-of-arms began to show. He was yellow to the core. He well nigh broke Sylvia Castle's tender heart, became mixed up with a married woman, and after Sylvia's success on the stage he dared to suggest—but that is the story of "The Little Brother of the Rich." A selected comedy is also being shown.

BRITISH-RUSSIAN FORCE IN SIBERIA MEETING WITH UNLOOKED FOR RESISTANCE

ARCHANGEL, July 2.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The British Russian offensive in North Russia, which was intended this summer to connect with Admiral Kolchak's Siberian army and establish Archangel as a base through which Allied supplies might be handled to all anti-Bolshevik armies in the field, has met with unexpectedly strong resistance on the Dvina river at the same time that Admiral Kolchak's armies have been driven backward into Siberia.

Because of insufficient forces, lack of open support by the Allied governments and the fact that natural factors have aided the Bolsheviki, the expedition, according to military opinion in Archangel at this time, may be doomed this summer to a failure equally as bad as that which met last summer's efforts unless large forces are thrown in at once by the Allied governments and a war against the Bolsheviki undertaken in earnest.

Throughout the long winter, when the Allies and Russians on the Archangel front were fighting a hard-pressed, defensive battle against superior forces, the Allied command was waiting the arrival of summer to take the offensive.

Fearing that political conditions in England would be greatly disturbed if it were to become known that the two brigades of British volunteer troops, sent ostensibly to effect the relief of Allied forces already imperiled and outnumbered, were in reality to be used as a reserve for this summer's offensive, the censor did not permit the local announcement to that effect to be cabled abroad.

This announcement, made to the Archangel press on June 6, by Major General Ironside, commander-in-chief of the North Russian forces, was to the effect that Archangel was to be made a base for the Siberian army, through an immediate offensive for Kotlass, on the river Dvina. Kotlass is the rail head for the line running to Viatka, on the Trans-Siberian railway, a distance of approximately 250 miles from the position at that time of Kolchak's advanced posts, since then driven back many miles eastward. In this campaign, said General Ironside, the British troops were to act as a reserve while the Russians went ahead.

The offensive began late in June, but so far has advanced only a few miles. Kotlass is still more than a hundred miles from the Russian and British positions on the Dvina, which are, in fact, only at about the same point where the Americans were established last autumn before the strong Bolshevik offensive caused them to withdraw during the winter.

Although compared with last summer's pitifully small force the present British and Russian command is well equipped, it is still far below the strength of the Bolsheviki in both numbers and artillery. The British gunboats and monitors, of which a large flotilla was sent for operations on the Dvina and Vaga rivers, have for the most part proved useless because of the low water.

Even the British volunteer forces have been informed that they will be withdrawn from North Russia before another winter sets in. All Americans and French are now off the Archangel front, and the newly trained Russian troops, most of whom were secured by draft, are limited in number, the territory being sparsely settled. They are, however, well equipped.

At the present time the North Russian government, which has established, under the direction of General Kolchak, "a "strong" policy to hold under discipline in the army and among the civilian population, is determined to carry on the war against Bolsheviki to the finish and the people appear anxious to cooperate.

Late in July Major General Ironside announced to the British government that the Russian troops in the Onega district, about 100 miles west of the Dvina river, had mutinied and handed over the Onega front and the town of Onega, to the Bolsheviki. No British troops were on the Onega front.

"But, yes!" she insisted, gayly imperious, and led the way across the deck. "You shouldn't even have been allowed up for supper, you know!"

Wallen, because he could do nothing else, followed her down the companionway and into the saloon.

And there, despite his good-natured grumbling, she stood and watched him in a quaint motherly way until, perforce, he was obliged to go to his cabin door—and then, with a cheery "Good night," she was gone.

"By Jove!" said Wallen softly to himself.

He locked the door, closed the porthole securely, switched on the light, and, seating himself on the edge of the bunk, stared at the floor.

"By Jove!" he repeated softly. Then lugubriously: "And it's only three days to Singapore, and—she didn't say where in Sumatra—but that couldn't be more than another three days at the outside."

He sat up suddenly and pulled out of his pocket the envelope that Captain Laynton had given him. He had not examined it yet. He tore the envelope open, shook the contents out onto the bunk, and whistled low, under his breath.

Among other things, but catching his eye instantly, was a little packet of crisp, new, American hundred-dollar gold certificates. He counted them wonderingly—one thousand one hundred dollars. He laid them down and picked up a wallet. It contained some silver and a few dollars in small bills.

Wallen passed his hand a little dazedly across his eyes; and then continued his examination. There was a photograph, a little faded, a little old-fashioned, the photograph of a very beautiful woman. He turned it over. On the back was written: "Elizabeth Powers Wallen."

His mother! He had never known his mother. He held the photograph for a long time in his hand, gazing at the face that now somehow seemed to smile back at him—then put it reverently aside.

There remained perhaps a dozen documents; mortgages in his father's favor, stock certificates and securities of various sorts, the total running into many thousands of dollars—sixty thousand, he put it at a guess, figuring the certificates at par value. Lastly there was a small sealed envelope.

He opened it with a curious sense of excitement. Here, perhaps, was the secret that had bound up his father's life so mysteriously, and—no—he whistled again in that low, surprised way. It was his father's will, a terse, short document, bequeathing everything "to my son, Stacey Wallen, whom I charge with the care of my faithful servant Gunga, as long as the latter shall live."

Wallen got up and began to pace the little cabin. Gunga! The will was dated at San Francisco two years ago. Where was Gunga now?

Dead, perhaps, since the two were inseparable and Gunga had not come aboard with his master at Honolulu—so Captain Laynton had stated. Captain Laynton! Wallen stared at the articles that littered the bunk—the conviction slowly dawning upon him that he had wofully misjudged the Monleigh's commander and mentally owed the other an apology for jumping so hastily to conclusions.

There was not even a shadow of proof that his father's death, after all, had not been accidental. His suspicions had arisen naturally enough in view of the past, and his own recent escape; but certainly it appeared to be decidedly "far-fetched" now, and certainly it was no deep-laid plot on the part of Captain Laynton, such as, in a hazy, fantastical way, he had imagined it might have been.

What possible motive could Laynton have in carrying out the original purpose for which he had been chartered, except that he felt in honor bound to do so? None!

And if the man had been dishonest he could have put that eleven hundred dollars lying there on the bunk into his own pocket and no one would have been the wiser! Even the matter of the wireless, which in his suspicious state of mind had assumed perhaps exaggerated proportions, had been shot to pieces, so to speak, as far as it bring there for any ulterior purpose was concerned—and by irrefutable evidence—Helen MacKay's!

And with a vision of brown eyes and gloriously truant hair before him and the thought of tomorrow when the vision should materialize into reality again he turned into his bunk.

And the "tomorrow" and the two days that followed, not only dispelled all final doubt from his mind but found him responding frankly to the general good-fellowship which he found existing in the cabin.

They passed quickly those three days—too quickly. And they were the happiest days Wallen had ever known—because Helen MacKay had made them happy days, and because a new glad thing had come into his life.

Had she, too, come to care? He did not know. Sometimes, in little intimate ways, in a smile or a glance or a word or a quick, trustful touch of the hand, he read the answer to his unspoken question as his soul wanted to read the answer.

And so they had passed those days, and it was the fourth night now since he had come aboard—and tomorrow they would be in Singapore.

He lay tossing in his bunk. A tumult of thought kept his brain active and alert. Singapore! What would Singapore bring him? Who was this Drink-House Sam?

It mattered a great deal now—a great deal more than it had mattered before.

For before, with a sort of berserk rage, he had been willing to take a gambler's chance, and, win or lose, stake his life against this devil, whoever he might be, that had tried to strike him down without warning, without a chance to defend himself; but now his life meant more to him—he wanted to live—for her.

"Thank God," he muttered, "that at least everything is all right on board here!"

He turned over and lay for perhaps ten minutes, trying to compose himself to sleep—but his eyes insisted on remaining fastened on a queer little white patch by the door. What was it? It wasn't the moonlight through the porthole reflecting on anything.

He raised himself up on his elbow several times to make sure of that. Finally, in a fretful way, he got out of his bunk to investigate. It was a piece of paper that had evidently been pushed in under the threshold—but whether ten minutes or two hours ago he had no idea.

Wallen picked up the paper, switched on the light—and suddenly it seemed as though his immediate surroundings had vanished, and he was living again a scene of many years ago. He was standing on the stairway of that grim, gray, lonely house in the dead of night, a trembling child in his nightclothes, and below in the hall, holding a candle, was his father and Gunga was bending over a form on the floor, and his father's voice was in his ears: "Look again, Gunga. Has he one finger on the left hand?"

And then Gunga's answer: "I have looked, sahib, and the hand is whole."

Wallen's face was strangely white. On the piece of parchment that he held was crudely traced a human hand, and the fingers, save for the forefinger, had the appearance of having been hacked away.

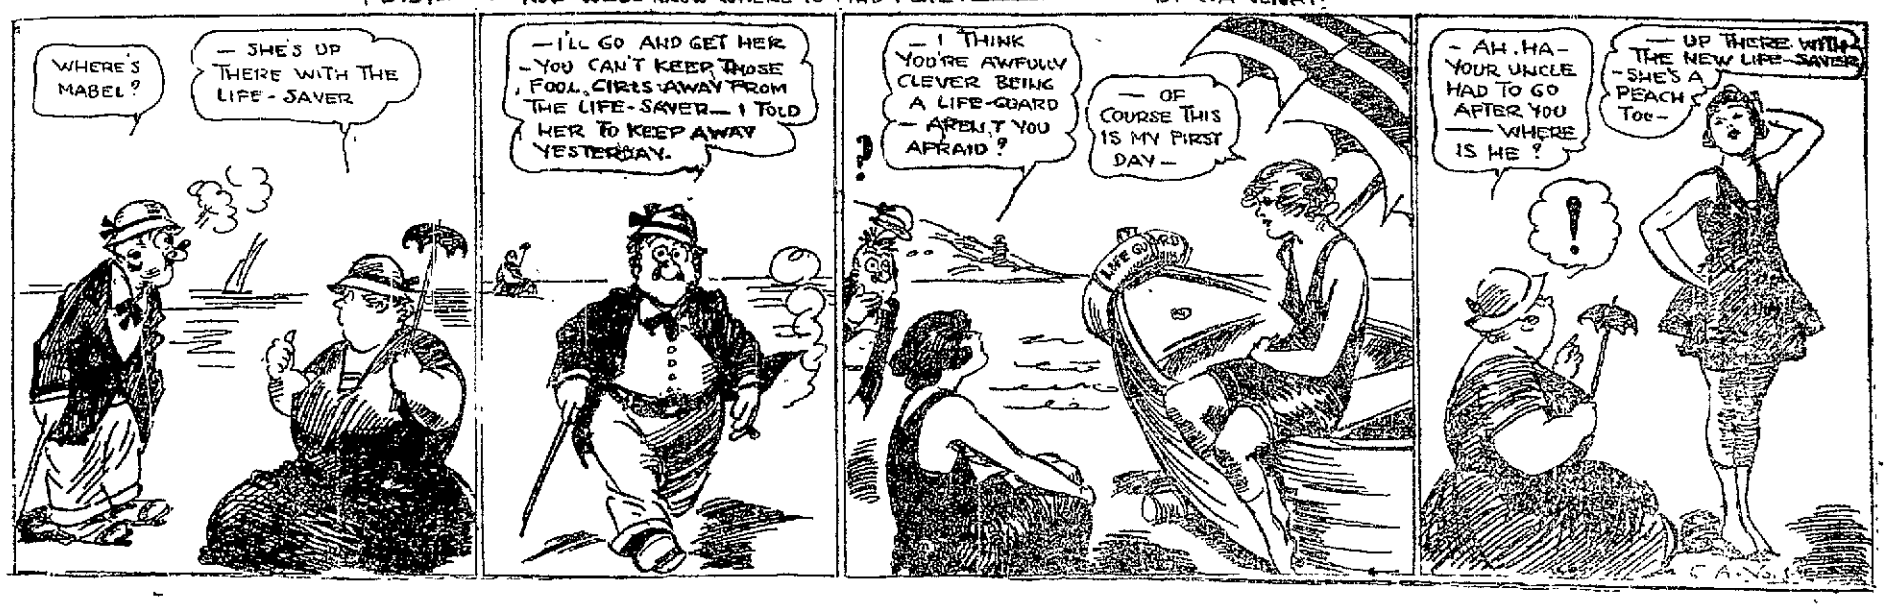
PETEY—— NOW WE'LL KNOW WHERE TO FIND PETEY —— BY C.A VOIGHT



UNITED STATES HAS RISEN RAPIDLY AS A NAVAL POWER

Now Second Only to Great Britain and Contender For First Place.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18—The rapid rise of the United States as a naval power during the past two years is graphically demonstrated in figures showing the sea strength of the various world powers, compiled by the Navy Department's office of Naval Intelligence. They show that the United States, close pressed by France in 1917 for its place as third naval power in the world, is now second only to Great Britain and is at present pushing to completion a building program that will make the American navy, for the first time in recent history, a formidable contender for first naval honors.

A little more than two years ago, the figures show, Germany, then second naval power, boasted more than 100 more ships of all classes than the United States, with a total tonnage exceeding that of the American navy by nearly 200,000 tons. Great Britain's fleet at that time numbered a total of 680 ships aggregating 2,375,564 tons as compared with Germany's 262 ships and 1,058,240 tons and the United States' 153 ships and 860,017 tons.

Today Germany, now in third place among naval powers, has a "paper" navy of 450 ships of all types, totaling 826,637 tons. These figures do not include German vessels surrendered to the Allies or Russian vessels in the hands of the Germans. Regarded from the standpoint of fighting efficiency as distinguished from number of ships and tonnage, Germany is outclassed by both France and Japan, her navy being composed almost entirely of old and obsolete vessels. The pride of Germany's sea powers was surrendered to the Allies at Scapa Flow, where many of them were sunk by their officers and crews.

Japan, fifth naval power in 1917, has passed France and Germany both and no wranks next to the United and now ranks next to the United actual standing of the naval powers of the world today from the standpoint of modern fighting strength according to the Navy Department's figures, is Great Britain, United States, Japan, France, Germany, Russia and Italy.

The completion of all vessels now building and projected will add 219 ships totaling 500,000 tons to the British navy as compared with 349 ships and 1,116,389 tons for the United States, 24 ships and 167,000 tons for Japan, and 13 ships and 96,000 tons for Germany, according to the most authentic figures available at the Navy Department.

The completion of the present building programs, a matter of about three years, will find the chief naval powers of the world with the following relative strengths: Great Britain 955 ships aggregating 3,772,542 tons; United States 608 ships totaling 2,117,922 tons; Japan 170 ships, 785,239 tons; France 253 ships, 719,237 tons and Germany 463 ships measuring 923,437 tons.

As a result of the great torpedo-boat destroyer building program carried out by the United States during the war the American navy now includes more than 150 destroyers of the fastest and latest type, with nearly 200 more building or contracted for. Great Britain owns about 425 of this type of vessel, many of them old and a little modern naval value, and has about 110 building or force has been so reduced as to make it a negligible factor. Japan owns 40 modern destroyers, according to best available figures, and has about 20 under construction.

Great Britain emerged from the war with by far the most powerful battleship and battle cruiser force in the world; although the United States now has under construction a formidable aggregation of major ships. England's navy today includes 55 battleships and 9 battle cruisers less than 20 years old, with four powerful battle cruisers now under construction.

The United States has 36 battleships capable of holding a place in a modern battle line and not including a number of old type battleships listed for sale or the scrap heap. Thirteen of the most modern battleships in the world are under construction for the United States and 6 battle cruisers are authorized and will be completed during the next three years.

Japan has 13 battleships and seven battle cruisers completed and four battle cruisers under construction or authorized. Germany retains 30 battleships and one battle cruiser, most of which are of practically no naval value, and has two battleships and three battle cruisers laid down on which construction has been stopped. France has 18 battleships and no battle cruisers completed and five battleships and four battle cruisers under construction.

The completion of the present building programs will find the following line up of major ships: Great Britain 55 battleships and 13 battle cruisers; United States 49 battleships and six cruisers; Japan 13 battleships and 11 battle cruisers; Germany 32 battleships and four battle cruisers, still subject to the final naval peace terms, and France 23 battleships and four battle cruisers.

Great Britain leads the world in cruiser and light cruiser strength with a total of 118 vessels of these types as compared with 30 for the United States, 28 for Japan, 37 for Germany and 19 for France.

Two naval powers formerly of considerable strength in addition to Germany have been at least temporarily eliminated as a result of the war, Russia and Austro-Hungary's sea forces having been demoralized. The insignificant Turkish naval power is held by the Allies.

GERMANS COMPLAIN GOVERNMENT TROOPS ARE EATING TOO MUCH

Clashes Between Civilians and Military Forces Reported Several Times Recently.

COBLENZ, July 27 — (Correspondence of the Associated Press) Throughout Germany there has been a renewal recently of clashes between troops of Gustav Noske, secretary for military affairs, and civilians but just what has caused the disturbances is not clear in dispatches published in German newspapers. American army officers, however, believe it quite possible that the manifestations are due to the food shortage, the relocation of Noske troops and the subsequent appearance of strange troops in many cities.

In Celle, Hanover, there has been trouble for more than a week, at times the manifestations amounting almost to riots over the appearance of a Jaeger battalion, which arrived recently from the eastern front. The citizens contended that this battalion had eaten too much of the city's food supply. In Heilbronn, Wuerttemburg, individual soldiers have been attacked and beaten by civilians at night and their insignia stolen. Disturbances between Insterburg, West Prussia, citizens and soldiers of the First Jaeger zu Pferde regiment has reached such a state that the civil authorities have made demands upon the government that the troops be moved to another district.

From information in the hands of the officers at headquarters of the American forces in Germany it is believed that, while the majority of the German people are now loyally supporting the government troops, there is an energetic minority which has been increasing in bitterness recently against the Noske troops wherever they have appeared in various parts of Germany.

TWO FLOTILLAS OF TORPEDO BOATS ALL GERMANY'S FLEET

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES IN GERMANY, July 27.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press)—The Germans have organized two flotillas of torpedo boats since the armistice and these constitute virtually all the warships left in active service in the German navy, according to information received here.

One of these flotillas is described in Mittschiffs, a German naval periodical which has reached the American headquarters, as the Iron Torpedo Boat Flotilla. It consists of twelve torpedo boats which, the periodical says, have been engaged in maintaining order on the western coast of Germany.

Some of the vessels of the flotilla have been used on several occasions for police work in the port of Hamburg, doing duty guarding allied food shipments to the Czecho-Slovaks and similar work during periods of disorder. The flotilla has its headquarters at Wilhelmshaven. A landing corps of about 360 men is distributed among the twelve boats, each of which has a platoon of thirty commanded by a naval lieutenant. The clothing and arms of members of this landing corps are the same as in the infantry.

The other group of vessels called the Haff flotilla is supposed to be doing similar duty on the Baltic coast near the Russian boundary, with headquarters in Koenigsberg. The boats are armed with machine guns, and in some cases with 3.7 centimeter guns as well. The flotilla was organized for operation in connection with the East Prussian Freiwillige corps and was until a few weeks ago subject to the command of the northern army.
